Sixteen miles away a force of 3,800 Confederates were stationed, and Confederate flags and stores were numerous in the town. Grants promptitude saved Paducah and the control of the Ohio river. It also straightened the backbone of neutral Kentucky, whose legislature at once passed resolutions favorable to the Union and spoke of neutrality no more., In this movement Grant defined the determination which afterwards was so marked and commented upon in his generalship. He left Paducah in charge of a garrison at noon the same day and returned to Cairo, where he received Fremont s permission to take Paducah if he felt strong enough. For two months afterwards he held the country at the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi and disciplined his forces, which by November numbered nearly 20, 000 men. Being subordinate to Fremont he was allowed to make no movement of importance. He wanted to take Columbus, an important point on the river twenty miles below Cairo, but not until the 6th of November was he ordered to move down the river. He had 3,100 men on transports, conveyed by two gunboats. A section of artillery, two squadrons of cavalry and five regiments constituted his force. Some of his men had only been in possession of their arms a few days, and were as raw as children and as undisciplined as cowboys. McClelland was the only general officer in his command, and had...
